Three Lessons That Made Us Better Investors

Over the course of our careers, we've learned some important lessons that professors didn't teach us in economics or finance classes. We believe it is useful to discuss three of these ideas that we wish we had understood on our first days on the job. In our new white paper, "Three Ideas I Wish I Had Understood From The Start: Lessons That Have Made Us Better Investors", we examine:

- The importance of creativity and how it is often unappreciated
- Why being open-minded is more important than being smart
- Why a steady temperament might be the most important characteristic of all
