Every institutional investor says they're long term — until a crisis hits.

In the wake of ongoing trouble at regional banks, not to mention rising inflation and interest rates, many long-term investors are reassessing their investment strategies.

"The hardest thing for clients in a time like this [is that], like everyone else, you start focusing on the immediate," said Kane Brennan, CEO at outsourced chief investment officer firm TIFF Investment Management. "It's just harder. Everyone does this wrong."
